15 gulp.task('watch', function() { ...
17 });
18
19 /
20  * compile less files from the ./styles folder
21  * into css files to the ./public/stylesheets folder
22  */
23 gulp.task('less', function () {
24     return gulp.src('./styles//*.less')
25         .pipe(less({
26             paths: [path.join(__dirname, 'less',

GitHub Pages

- <https://pages.github.com>

The image shows a screenshot of the GitHub Pages website. At the top, it says "GitHub Pages" in white text on a dark background. Below that, the main heading reads "Websites for you and your projects." in large white font. Underneath, a sub-headline states "Hosted directly from your GitHub repository. Just edit, push, and your changes are live." The main content area features a responsive design example for a website titled "Design Resources". The desktop view shows a navigation bar with a Facebook logo and the text "Design Resources". The main content area has the heading "A collection of free resources made by designers at Facebook" and a grid of image thumbnails. One thumbnail is titled "iOS 9 GUI (iPhone)" and another is "Diverse Device". A white smartphone is overlaid on the right side of the screenshot, showing the mobile version of the same website. The mobile version has a simplified navigation bar with the Facebook logo and three menu items: "iOS 9 GUI", "Handa Kit", and "Origami". The main content area on the phone displays the same heading and a single large thumbnail.
